A man with brain metastasis from lung cancer received standard chemotherapy with carboplatin (CDDP) and etoposide (VP-16) up to 25 mg/m2, 5-FU, ADM, and UFT in addition to whole brain irradiation. However, it was ineffective. He then received methotrexate (MTX) 1 g/m2 and CDDP 8 mg/m2 in addition to the present chemotherapies. The MTX and CDDP regimens induced severe nausea and myelosuppression. To make up for these problems, we added folic acid and G-CSF. After addition of these drugs, MTX and CDDP regimens were effective, resulting in shortening of the therapeutic course and marked improvement of quality of life. We discuss the present chemotherapies for brain metastasis from lung cancer. source: url.openStream()); writer.write(jsonUtil.serialize(source)); writer.flush(); fos.flush(); Assert.assertTrue(fos.toString().contains("EntityManager ")); } finally { writer.flush(); writer.close(); } } catch (Exception e) { e.printStackTrace(); } } @Test @TransactionConfiguration(defaultRollback=true) @Transactional(propagation=Propaga
