One of Photoshop's features is smart objects. Smart objects give you a sort of self-destruct function that keeps your edits trackable. If you make a change to a smart object and then quit Photoshop, then the smart object will be stored in memory as a file for the next time you edit it. Adobe announced last year that it was phasing out the Mac OS X version of Photoshop and instead introducing Photoshop Lightroom, which can be run in a web browser. It also enables users to edit high-resolution image files for the web. User interface In the old days, you could get pretty complex if you started fiddling with the layers in Photoshop. Q: UIScrollView with 2 pages I have a UIScrollView with a UILabel as a view subview. I want to get different UIViews on different pages within the UIScrollView. What is the best way to do this? A: Put your labels and views into a NSMutableArray; get the frames, sizes, etc. for each of the views in an NSMutableDictionary, and each section of your scroll view with an NSMutableArray; then you can set the size/frame properties for each of those elements in your NSMutableArray. Who won Brexit, as it happened: the pollsters, the academics, the pundits and the politicians. It was hard to keep up with the Tory leadership chaos on Thursday, with contenders doing everything from leading "demonstrations" of loyalty to supporting each other's manifestos. So I thought it would be illuminating to go back to the school of political science, the town halls and the offices of opinion polling companies to see who they reckon won the referendum campaign. My colleague Kieran Donaghy is out with his first-of-a-kind take on the results of all these methods - visit our blog here. I'll be adding to this analysis in the coming days. All the polls took place in the immediate aftermath of the vote, with the vast majority of them being published between 6.00pm and 8.00pm. But in the midst of such a historic, complicated, unpredictable event, there is bound to be a fair bit of guesswork - especially among pollsters. It's been argued by some that the polls were misled by the demographics of the voters who took part in the referendum. That is not to say there is anything wrong with that. Image copyright PA Image caption The options on the ballot papers were "Remain" and "Leave" But the average Remain voter was 55 years old and had a degree. According to the first-of-its-kind study by researchers at the London School of Economics, Remain supporters were also richer, a bit less cynical about politics and more likely to be liberal/left-leaning than Leave voters. In other words, we should have expected these different groups of voters to have different views about the future of the UK. Why did they vote as

Q: Removing web services in SharePoint I have a document library that contains approx. 6gb of data. The data includes a lot of webservices, which are used throughout the solution. I would like to remove those webservices for performance reasons. Is this possible? I've tried to remove references in the project of the project, which isn't successful because it seems to pick up other references, that I then also remove. Do I have to manually select each service and remove it and then the project can be removed? I can't remove the whole solution as it is used throughout the company. What is the best solution for this? A: My first advice would be to remove references to those webservices - it doesn't sound like you want to have them in the project after all, correct? If you have a solution that is pulling down code, you should be able to use the "unload" command on every file/folder/webservice in your solution, saving that code to a distinct folder for later re-using. I'm not seeing anywhere in your question where it's stated you're asking for an approach that would allow a solution that is used by other projects in the company to remain intact? If that's the case, you may be better off just having those references / implementing those webservices in an outside project. Although Tom Steyer is just a billionaire who doesn't like Donald Trump, he has now accused Trump's presidency of being a "fascist movement" and implied that Republicans were aiding and abetting it. That's in comparison to when I suggested that Steyer was just a rich guy who doesn't like Trump: Will Steyer be the next to come forward with evidence that Trump is a fascist? Steyer probably earned the title of the "f— Donald Trump" candidate. His buying advertising time and getting involved in Democratic politics is certainly over the top, but he is no stranger to throwing around the "f" word. Let's take a quick look at some of his more memorable statements: "Fascism is on the march around the world." — Tom Steyer at a DNC fundraiser in February 2016. "Fascism is on the march in this country, too." — Tom Steyer at an event at Harvard's Kennedy School of Government on November 17
