Share this article on LinkedIn Email GP2's GP3 title leader Trident Racing is likely to run a second Audi entry in 2014, with regular driver Edoardo Mortara ending speculation about his future in Formula 1. The Italian outfit confirmed on Thursday that it would increase to two entries next season, with the second seat expected to be handed to Mortara. Trident, which has backed the Italian since the team's maiden F1 programme in 2010, announced in August that it would again be competing in the top flight of European F3 next year. Mortara is believed to be nearing a deal to remain with Trident, the Italian having been without a full-time drive since 2010. Autosport has learned that Mortara is likely to be confirmed in Trident's cockpit once the deal is done to race in Euro F3, though other rumours about his planned seat status in F1 had circulated in recent weeks. "We are talking to the team to see if it's possible," Mortara told Autosport. "We have to respect the agreement I have with Trident, but after the end of this season there will be a lot of excitement. "I am very happy with it, I have to believe in what I am doing. "The team is improving and I think we can do great things. I love racing and I am very interested in coming back to F1. "Now I need to take the step forward, but we are very close to finding something." Trident's decision to add another driver to its 2018 line-up can be traced back to 2012, when it fielded two cars and ran three-year-old drivers Roberto Merhi and Jules Bianchi. Both drivers struggled
