Combined endoscopic and endovascular approaches for the treatment of deep cerebrovascular lesions: technical case report. Endovascular treatment (EVT) is one of the most reliable approaches in the management of cerebral aneurysms, with lower morbidity and mortality rates when compared with the surgical option. Nevertheless, given their tortuosity, deep-seated position, and the presence of other intracranial vascular structures, endovascular treatment of lesions can be difficult, especially in cases of wide-neck aneurysms. In these cases, the combined endovascular and endoscopic approach (CEE) provides access to the lesion, thus allowing adequate catheterization and placement of coils, and facilitating the subsequent endoscopic procedure. A 45-year-old man presented with acute onset headache, dizziness, and aphasia. On admission, magnetic resonance imaging showed a middle cerebral artery bifurcation aneurysm, with a wide neck. The patient was referred to our neurointerventional unit for EVT of the lesion. Because of its morphologic features, the possibility of a wide-neck aneurysm was taken into account. A CEE was performed with the patient in prone position under general anesthesia. A mean approach time of 12 minutes was registered. No access difficulties were observed. Endosaccular coil placement was performed in the aneurysm, and an endoscopic approach was performed from the neck of the aneurysm using a 3e33713323
