Mats.Mechanics: i am 12 year old just about to do allb3school 2 weeks break and have two whole evenings free to make it last for 3 days how do i download the free client to play 9 dragons does it cost Â£ 0.99 to download itQ: On pointer move/copy c-style I have a function in C++ and I am rewriting it in C. Since that function allocates memory on the stack, my plan is to just use malloc/realloc with C functions (I am probably going to replace all of std::vectors with C-style arrays). The other day I came across this piece of code from : #ifdef __cplusplus extern "C" void operator new(__SIZE_TYPE__ __size) { return ::operator new(__size); } #endif It seems as if new is a variable-length array. I thought that data-members in C++ are not "modified" when they are copied/moved and that they are "copied" at the time of definition or initialization. Does that function allow copying/moving of its parameters or do those just undergo move-semantics? A: C++ has rules about how arguments to functions are to be passed, and the same rules also apply to member functions. A move/copy of an argument results in a move/copy of the contained members. This is mandated by the language. §15.3.3/4 [class.mfct.non-member] A prvalue of type "pointer to cv1 B" can be explicitly converted to a prvalue of type "pointer to cv2 D", where B and D are class types, having the same cv-unqualified version of T, and cv2 is more cv-qualified than cv1. The result of the conversion is a pointer to the cv2 D subobject of the B object (if any) pointed to by the original pointer, or null otherwise. Thus, if foo is a member function with a T parameter, then the copy/move of that argument involves copying the contained T, which is not allowed to be a non-POD type. If foo is a free function taking a T* parameter, then the copy/move

It is up to us to follow, or not, as we see fit. It is our choice. If we stay in our own way, if we don't stay open and allow life to teach us, our road will be littered with dead ends and blocked by the fears that keep us from letting life show us the way. Why We Let Fear Come In When we get stuck in our own world, when our inner compass is lost and we don't know which way to turn, we let fear come in. Fear is the dark shadow that blocks the light of freedom. It keeps us trapped in our own way of being. I choose to stay open and let the light of life show me the way. I follow my heart and listen to its guidance. I am on my way. I've got it. I've found the path. The
