It is being developed for Windows, iOS and Android operating systems and it is designed to work with all computer programs, not only Autodesk. This new version of AutoCAD is designed to work with existing AutoCAD files and drawings. In 2019, Autodesk announced that they will be adding a new feature to AutoCAD 360. With the help of cloud-based machine learning, AutoCAD 360 will be able to learn about objects in AutoCAD. It will be able to tell where objects are in 3D space and help you place objects in 2D. AutoCAD 360 is a free service for the desktop edition of AutoCAD and charges US$1 per month for the mobile and web versions. AutoCAD 360 is cloud-based and also has some limitations. It is not possible to edit drawing objects while the application is in 'cloud mode'. Q: SQL query for sum of values I have a table that stores the sum of the values in a column each time a user purchases something. |id|user_id|purchases| | 1| 1 | 2 | | 2| 1 | 4 | | 3| 2 | 5 | The table is fairly small, but I have a lot of rows of data (mostly for non-logged in users). I'm using an embedded ruby on rails and have to deal with something like 60k rows of data. I need to sum the purchase values for a user. So for a user I'm looking to get back: |user_id|total_purchases| | 1 | 7 | I've read through all the questions I could find on this topic, but nothing solved my problem. I'm using something like this: users.sum("purchases") but that seems to be a bad way to do things. So I'm asking the question again, is there an efficient way to do this with sql queries that I'm not thinking about? Thanks, A: SELECT user_id, SUM(purchases) total_purchases FROM purchases GROUP BY user_id BTW, normally, a column name is followed by an alias and you should use it. So the name of the column should be purchases_amount, not purchases. SELECT user_id, SUM(purchases_amount) total_purchases FROM purchases GROUP BY user_id A: This should get you started. select sum(purchases) as total_purchases from purchases where user_id = 1; Q: Using shell script to create a TAR file with multiple files I am writing a script to create a TAR
