In 1975, a federal statute brought the 1936 and 1940 codes into line in the definition of the felonies subject to capital punishment. In this statute, only bribery, perjury, and treason are defined as capital crimes. It is this section that is primarily seen as having expanded the Code’s scope. The use of the modifier in Article 7 also expanded the definition of the substantive crime for subversion; hence the inclusion of that offense in the Code’s reporting requirements. Finally, the “any other person” in Article 7 allows the government to prosecute crimes otherwise falling under the category of subversion (assassinations, for example) as “noncapital” crimes where the statutorily specified act of killing is done for “any other person.” A 1988 statute eliminated this “other person” language, leaving the substantive crime of subversion an inherent part of the Code’s definition and amending the 1970 Act so as to include the mandatory reporting of the crimes of subversion, bribery, and treason. The Code’s 1977 amendments in Section 704b.2 explicitly recognized the court’s right to tailor any sentence appropriately, based upon the facts and circumstances of a particular case. In fact

A feathering is used to reduce the nose down the slope of a landing surface at a slow speed, while a flare is used at a high speed, to prevent stalling. Maneuver - is a change in the course of an aircraft's speed or direction of flight without changing its altitude. A turn to port is accomplished by a bank to port of a given amount. A turn to starboard is a bank to starboard of a given amount. These actions require a coordinated change in the amount and direction of thrust. Take-off - refers to the start of a flight. The conditions must be within the appropriate body of regulations for a take-off. For example, if an aircraft is parked on the ground, it should be moved (or blown if windy). On a taxiway, it may require an idle engine and a run-up. Once all appropriate conditions are met, it must be moved forward so as not to impede taxiing traffic. Low stow & High stow - Wing stow positions & roll of wings are considered to be low or high stow in FAR (US) and ICAO regulations. Low-stow is the default position of the wings in transport category airplanes, while a high-stow position is required for maneuvering or ferry. In A320neo and A321neo, the wings can be either in high or low stow position. Wings-in-ground contact/wings-out-ground contact - In most aircraft, the wings will touch the ground when the aircraft is rolling on the ground. For this reason, this position is called wings-in-ground contact. Longitudinal trim - is used to adjust the center of gravity of an aircraft. It can be accomplished by changing the angle of attack with the ailerons, or by changing fuselage weight with the nose and tail. Vertical stabilizer - Is a complex aerodynamic device that allows for pitch stability. The basic function is to stabilize pitch by resisting the effects of the aircraft's weight and momentum. The vertical stabilizer can be tipped up to compensate for CG changes, as well as aileron deflection. Vertical stabilizers
