The sound quality is great, with 6 HDMI inputs and 4 audio outputs (including optical). The input and output stages have been tested and they are really stable. Installing the unit is just a matter of plugging it in, no soldering. Digital Optical and Analog RCA ports are present. You will find a helpful owner manual that allows you to configure the units features. The sound quality is really good, with no problems with treble or bass. It can deliver good power as long as you connect a solid amp to it (6V for the HC303 and 6.8V for the HC305), using one of the following amps: OLD amps: I paired the HC303 with the Entroworks Silverstone, a well-known 1 channel amp capable of delivering up to 200W of power (the stock fan was set to 80% of output). So if you're a big fan of big bass, go for the Silverstone. I then connected the HC303 to a VMAC MCA power supply (not shown in the picture). VMAC is a really solid amp that delivers 100W into 8 ohms. It's way more powerful than the stock amp. It's also a really clean amp with a solid 200W amp capability. It worked really well with the HC303 and its bass was more than good. Performance wise, I never had any issues with the amplifier. Mainly, with a 200W amp powering it, the player remains really stable at high volume levels, even when pushed to the limit (with the head placed 12" from the amplifier). There's no doubt about it: it's a great amp. Green amp: I was debating between the Onkyo VHT-S5S and the KEF LS50. I was torn between the Onkyo because it was a little cheaper and was capable of playing
