neri quickly took the speaker's offer and departed with them to meet her own people in the plaguelands. thalyora stayed behind with some of her blood knights while lor'themar and some rangers traveled to the plaguelands under the rangers' new commander, tiercel turni's guidance. [52] with tiercel's help, lor'themar was able to successfully defeat a large number of the naga, who, when confronted, revealed their identity as gnomes. the gnomes revealed that the naga were one of the races that had sided with the horde before the spellplague. they also told lor'themar that the naga had been the ones who had aided in the destruction of quiet'thalas. after the alliance imprisoned the naga king, anagal, the gnomes were also able to tell him that they had once been enslaved by the mogu, and had fought back and overthrown their enemies. lor'themar traveled to the gnome city of gnomeregan, where he was met by the gnome king, orsic. though he was initially fearful of the horde's presence, lor'themar was warmly welcomed and promised that the gnomes would aid the horde. together, the horde and the gnomes traveled to the plaguelands and were met with the gnome general, gnomeregan, who quickly took command of the horde forces. nen and her gnomes guided the horde forces to the south of the plaguelands, through the shimmering flats. once they reached the coast, the horde marched south to the city of or'azhara. there, they met up with thral, carne, and jaina. they were also accompanied by a group of horde rangers, who had been freed from the violet hold and reunited with their commander, timmy o'rouke, who was now in charge of the horde rangers.

after being told about the banshee queen's plan, lor'themar went about creating an army of banshee to assist him in the assault on the zul'gurub; the horde holding the western shores of the blood sea while the alliance armies took the eastern. in the assault itself, the horde forces fought alongside the sin'dorei, with a banshee aiding the grand magister in combat. the banshee queen's forces were eventually able to ascend the dread wastes, and strike at zul'gurub itself. the banshee queen had intended to bring the lich king's essence to the mortal realm, but the undead forces of the scourge were able to withstand the banshee's power and to resist her. the banshee queen was wounded in the attack, and retreated with her forces. a month after the uneasy alliance was formed, sylvanas and thrall accompanied lor'themar on a scouting mission to scout the renegade blood elf camp at the mouth of the dead scar. the horde leaders sought to discover whether the blood elves were a direct threat to their interests, or whether they were working with the horde. lor'themar spied two blood elf shamans and made contact, but his gamble paid off when one of the shamans revealed that kael'thas was alive and in the valley. lor'themar told thrall of his plans to break into the blood elf camp with an army of orcs. sylvanas decided to accompany lor'themar and thrall to provide backup in the event of a blood elf ambush. at the camp, lor'themar and the rest of his army surprised the blood elves, with the majority of the horde forces attacking the camp from the north and the rest from the east. lor'themar ordered his archers to take out the blood elf shamans, while a small group of orcs rushed into the campsite, killing many of the blood elves. although the battle was brief, lor'themar, sylvanas and thrall were able to capture a blood elf shaman, an orc woman named kvaldir, and the battle commander othrak. when asked about kael'thas, the woman refused to answer, explaining that all she knew was that they were going to meet with an emissary of a far more powerful lord. lor'themar decided to kill kvaldir for her insolence, but thrall and sylvanas intervened, with the warchief blaming lor'themar for kvaldir's death. lor'themar resigned himself to his fate, but when the warchief's wrath was restrained, the blood elves announced that they wanted to meet with kael'thas. lor'themar was skeptical, but the warchief relented, and the blood elves journeyed south to meet with kael'thas.
