Q: Why is this `jquery.attr()` giving me a blank array? I have a form that uses jquery to set the value of an input box in an array. I need this array later on in the code, but the only way to get the value of the field in the array is to do this: `var box = $('#tag-form').attr('data-box');` This gives me a value of 'blank'. But when I do this: `var box = $('#tag-form').attr('data-box');` I get a value of an array like this: `["category2", "category3", "category4"]` Why is this? Is there something wrong with my code? Or is there something wrong with the way that I'm retrieving the value from the field? A: This is because you are trying to get attribute value for an element, and in this case there is none. If you look at the page source, you can see it has: You need to use `val()` to get the value of an element. `var box = $('#tag-form').val();` Demo: Fiddle However you should look into
