PVMeasure calculates power consumption of all installed graphics cards and adds them to a power report. Graphics cards are responsible for the majority of electricity consumption in a PC. This is why there are many tools to measure the power consumption of individual cards or groups of cards. However, if a company installs a power meter in a room and measures the total consumption of that room, the power consumption of the installed graphics cards is not considered in the calculation. PVMeasure calculates the total power consumption of all installed graphics cards and their combined consumption in the room. This way, the total power consumption of all installed cards is considered and the actual power consumption of the graphics cards installed in a room can be determined. PVMeasure is a powerful tool that supports nearly all types of graphics cards. It also supports the latest power models from NVIDIA and ATI.
