Q: What do I do with large amount of top-priority requests that don't look like they'll be able to be handled right away? I have been in the position where I have a large number of high-priority requests in my queue that, based on my current work load, I can't get to right away. This is troublesome because it makes it look like I'm ahead when I'm not because I'm actually behind. What are some standard ways to handle this situation? A: From my own experiences, I just try to be optimistic. If I can't see the results of my hard work within a day or two, then they obviously weren't going to be done on time anyway. The only thing I would ask is to not be afraid to break your promise. Breaking a promise that seems blatantly ill-advised might help a bit. My point is that the people who are waiting will never really hold it against you,
